

This message must be engaged upon with prayerful study and a full focus upon our Lord and Savior. Otherwise, the temptation of falling into despair may overtake the heart after coming to comprehend the level of deceit unleashed by the cunning master of deception. Perhaps no pagan deity in the history of the world has ensnared so many nations and religious sects as the Mother of the Gods. Her name is Cybele (pronounced sib-uh-lee), but it is certainly not her only name. She is known in the Bible as the “queen of heaven”. She is also known as Rhea, Ops, Magna Mater, Isis, Astroarche, Berecynthia, Mater, Fauna, Magna Pales, Mylitta, Bona Dea, Melecheth, Vesta, Ishtar, and Mother Earth among other names. She can be connected to the Christmas tree and many Easter traditions. Her followers would baptize themselves in the blood of the victims sacrificed in honor of her. The heart of the sacrificial victim was the only part that was actually offered to her though. When it comes to Cybele (queen of heaven), the only action a Christian should take is to walk away from everything associated with her mythology. Christians have long been aware of the dangers this cult poses, and some have been willing to die rather than submit to Cybelean worship. According to the Catholic Encyclopedia, Theodore of Amasea burned the temple of Cybele rather than sacrifice to pagan gods.

"When the edict against the Christians was issued by the emperors, he was brought before the Court at Amasea and asked to offer sacrifice to the gods. Theodore, however, denied their existence and made a noble profession of his belief in the Divinity of Jesus Christ. The judges, pretending pity for his youth, gave him time for reflection. This he employed in burning the Temple of Cybele. He was again taken prisoner, and after many cruel torments was burned at the stake."

Today's Christian would be wise to also shun this god of many names. Since the time of Christ, her worship has found its way into Christianity, via Rome, through her feasts which have been replaced by modern Christmas and Easter celebrations. It is through Cybele and Attis that main stream Christianity has been indoctrinated into a form of sun worship. Her inroad into Islam was through the black stone at the Kaaba. When Muhammad took control of Mecca, he cleared the Kaaba of all of the idols except for the one he kissed. Since that time, millions have fallen prey to this form of stone worship as they imitate him in kissing the stone. The Bible refers to her as the “queen of heaven” and strongly warns people away from her. The Bible refers to her sidekick as Tammuz and clearly rejects the rituals associated with him such as self-flagellation. Under the alias of Alma Mater, she rules over the most anti-Christian environments in civilized Society. The university is where she chips away at the foundation of Christianity by promoting evolution and casting doubt about God. One must consider that she is a tool of deception used by both the false prophet and the anti-Christ beast in leading astray the two largest groups of people who claim allegiance to the God of Abraham. Her symbolism can be found in homes around the world in the form of pine trees and “sacred heart” images. Modern day processions carry the image of Cybele in the form of the “Virgin Mary” through the streets of cities all around the globe. She is viewed as the mediator and protector by the very souls that she leads away from Christ. However, throughout the ages, many of God's people have successfully and steadfastly rejected her as the impostor that she is.

Cybele

Volumes have been written about her by numerous ancient historians and modern-day mythologist alike. She has been known by a multitude of names in almost every corner of the planet. In mythology her roots are often found in a Phrygian forest located in modern day Turkey. Throughout the ages she has become intertwined in Egyptian, Greek, and Roman mythology as well as Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. People around the world have celebrated her festivals for thousands of years, and she has found her way into virtually every institute of higher learning in the world. The Bible portrays her as a serious stumbling block for the people of God. Some might be inclined to call her the black stone of death, and yet millions see it as one of their religious duties to traverse the world in the hopes of pressing their lips to her unremarkable likeness. Other people shed endless heartfelt tears in her honor. Sincere Christians sing her praises, and one Pope even released a music C.D. in her honor. Rulers have sought her. Warriors have smashed her, and she has been credited with the rise and fall of some of the most powerful nations the earth has ever seen. Her likeness has been carried in the hands of a single woman and yet a ship was constructed for the sole purpose of conveying her from her Phrygian homeland to the very heart of Rome.
